Under the Mosaic law a woman with an issue of blood (referring to menstrual or postpartum bleeding) was considered unclean and was "put apart" for 7 days. During this time anything she lay on or sat on was considered "unclean" meaning that if anyone touched one of those things he would have to wash his clothes and bathe in water to become clean again.

It could happen to you—one day, you find a few suspicious diluted blood drops in your bathtub or on your kitchen floor. You check your cat and cannot find any obvious signs of injury until you notice that they're urinating blood in the most inappropriate places, regardless of being perfectly house trained.
