In one sense, faith in Christianity is often discussed in terms of believing God's promises, trusting in his faithfulness, and relying on God's character and faithfulness to act. Some of the definitions in the history of Christian theology have followed the biblical formulation in Hebrews 11:1: "the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen".

One of the most elemental aspects of the Christian system is that of faith. The writer of Hebrews classifies faith as one of those first principles that ought to be understood by the most immature student. And yet, many seem not to grasp the significance of this magnificent quality. It is difficult ...

Faith and Reason. Traditionally, faith and reason have each been considered to be sources of justification for religious belief. Because both can purportedly serve this same epistemic function, it has been a matter of much interest to philosophers and theologians how the two are related and thus how the rational agent should treat claims derived from either source.
